

Background

Emma Pendleton Bradley Hospital, which opened in 1931, was the nation's first psychiatric hospital devoted exclusively to children and adolescents, and today remains the only such hospital in the region.

Created by the wills of George and Helen Bradley in memory of their daughter Emma, Bradley Hospital provides a continuum of inpatient, school, residential, partial, outpatient and special education services for infants through adolescents. A major teaching affiliate and research center of The Warren Alpert Medical School of Brown University, Bradley Hospital is world renowned for its expertise in child and adolescent psychiatry. More than 30 postdoctoral residents and fellows in child psychiatry, psychology and pediatrics receive training in Bradley Hospital's programs every year. Bradley Hospital is a private, not-for-profit hospital and is licensed as an acute care hospital.

In 2012, Bradley Hospital, together with Hasbro Children's Hospital, opened a medical-psychiatric inpatient unit, now comprising 16 beds, for patients ages 6 to 18 with both acute mental health and medical conditions. The program takes place on the 6th floor of Hasbro Children's Hospital; the environment offers both private and semi-private rooms and areas for family, group and milieu therapy.
